

Indiana has a law preventing telemarketers from calling residents who sign up for our state do not call list. I understand that certain banks are wanting this reversed, so that they may begin selling their products. This is something that is entirely wrong and should not be allowed. Telemarketers are a sore in the side of every person in the country. The call at very rude times such as; dinner, early mornings, and late evenings. If a person wants something bad enough, then they will undoubtedly seek it out on their own with or without a call from a bothersome telemarketer. This law has created so much peace in my household, and I would hate to see it overturned, in fact, I would go so far as to remove telephone service from my house and go completely cellular. This is something that I am sure several people would also do, just for the simple thing called 'peace and quiet'.
